Revitcity com object green wall living plant city free bim for 3ds max ifc revit · Irreversible toxicity of arsenite in mouse skin and kidney: possible mechanism of toxicity. The toxicity of arsenite in mouse skin and kidney was studied. Mice (CD-1 strain) were given an i.v. injection of sodium arsenite and examined for 7 days, or given a continuous infusion of the same dose (0.4 or 0.8 mg/kg/day) and were killed at various time periods (7, 14, or 28 days). Biochemical, radiographic, and histologic studies were carried out on the tissues. At 7 and 14 days, arsenite produced skin lesions that were characterized by swollen, necrotic lesions and a speckled appearance in the dermis. In kidney, arsenite produced similar lesions at 7 days, but changes in the cortex were present only at 14 days. Biochemical alterations were observed primarily in kidney at 14 days. A marked accumulation of labeled arsenite was observed in the adrenal gland. These data suggest that the primary site of arsenite toxicity is in the skin, but that there is secondary toxicity in the kidney. A mechanism of toxicity is discussed. We have reported the presence of an enzyme in the venom of the snake Cardiodistoma scutatatum (Ophidobothrioidea) which inhibits the cleavage of fibrinogen by thrombin and is the result of the combined action of two

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of making carbon fiber products, and more particularly, to a method of making carbon fiber products having strength, elasticity, and great strength against overload, as well as having high modulus of elasticity. 2. Description of the Prior Art At present, there is a growing demand for lightweight products for automobiles and aircrafts in order to improve fuel efficiency. Of the forms of carbon fiber products, there are carbon fiber products such as woven fabrics and non-woven fabrics. Carbon fiber products such as woven fabrics are widely used as airplane seats, aircraft floor mats, and interior car carpets. Furthermore, carbon fiber products such as non-woven fabrics are widely used in car carpets and seat cloths. In recent years, as the use of carbon fiber products has extended, they have been applied to a broad range of fields, including not only the aerospace industry, but also the sporting goods industry, furniture industry, and skin care industry. The carbon fiber products have been manufactured through either the wet spinning or dry spinning method. In the wet spinning method, high-cost amino acid-based pitch is first spun into a precursor filament which is formed into yarn. Subsequently, the precursor yarn is transformed to a final carbon fiber product in a well-known process. In the dry spinning method, a high-cost polymeric precursor is wet-spun into precursor yarn (i.e., yarn precursor) which is then transformed into a final carbon fiber product by a low-cost process. Since the carbon fiber products can be made cheaper, have high thermal conductivity, high mechanical strength, and a specific shape, the carbon fiber products have been accepted as good substitutes for conventional products. However, the dry spinning method has the problem that is that the spinning of the polymeric precursor requires a special high-cost and complicated spinning apparatus, making the manufacturing process extremely expensive. Furthermore, the dry spinning method has a disadvantage that because of a large difference in price between the polymeric precursor and the final carbon fiber product, there is a gap between the price of the final product and the price of the precursor. Therefore, there
