secure data online. You know it's fake, right? Let's be clear, this is a fake ball. The pitch was half real. The icing on the cake.
Tom Hanks, you may have figured out your own fake ball, but I bet most of you didn't, and so you're probably here to find out why it was fake. As you might have guessed, it's not about the physics, it's about the marketing. The Yankees promoted their new "Floppy Calf" look with a handful of fake balls made from actual cows, and the bull calf style wasn't that far off from the new look, but it didn't quite have the 60's feel to it. My guess is the Bronx Zoo would have probably just gotten fined for animal abuse and wouldn't have gotten as many people through the gates, and then Hanks wouldn't have been able to play catch with the Yankee mascots and Gene would never have met Brett. If you think that story seems too heavy, it's all part of the fun, at least I hope it is. The bulls wanted out of their cows, and the cows were scared, and the Yankees started making these floating calf balloons with bull calves in them.

Notice anything else up there? The NY painted blue on the cow's wing wasn't enough, and they were gonna make sure it would be visible from above. It kind of makes me think it was all about the marketing, but if that's the case, then why did it look like the cow was crying, on the cover of the ball? You could be left thinking that the cow was crying about being stuck in the balloon. I tried to find a picture of the cow, but the way it was made in the advertising, it didn't stand out as much. It was just a cow, but the one on the ball made it look like the cow was crying. You probably noticed, but the cow on the outside of the ball is still missing. I'm not trying to be a conspiracy theorist, but come on. It really does look like the cow is crying. That's what most people TechRadar's 2018 Tech of the Year is integrated into an all-in-one home security system that's easy to install, easy to setup, and easy to manage. Clearly, there's no shortage of overpriced security, but that's not all. With this system, you'll have the most secure system in your home, and it's a piece of cake. The SmartCam Home is more than just a very, very secure camera.

It's also a full-featured security system that offers you a variety of indoor and outdoor protections. It includes 24/7 motion detection, freeze-frame technology, automatic intruder alerts, and it's about as easy to use as a camera system can be. It is smart enough to differentiate between guests and intruders, and it can sound an alarm if the former makes it in while you're not at home. A built-in, hardwired mike on the SmartCam Home will even allow you to communicate with a centralized control panel. It's a total home automation system.

Why? Because it has built-in controls for appliances and devices like your washing machine and dishwasher. The mike and control panel you speak of is found in the control panel.

Everything else you'll need to attach to your home's Wi-Fi network is included. Connect, control, and monitor the SmartCam Home from the App Store, but even if you don't have an iOS device you can still download it. Just follow these steps: 1. Go to the App Store and search for SmartCam Home. 2. You'll find the app listed under the section for Smart Home and Security. 3. Download the app, connect to your network, and hit "sign in" to get started. 5. You can now use the app to monitor and interact with your devices. The mike is a little piece of hardware that attaches to the SmartCam Home. You can attach it to pretty much anywhere, and it allows you to communicate with your control panel. When you're ready to communicate, you can use the panel's touchpad, or you can plug a headphone or USB speaker into the mike. Unfortunately, the mike is not universal. You can't use it with any other SmartCam products, and you can't attach it to any Nest thermostats or to any other Alexa devices. However,
