Until now I've been primarily focusing on reference information and analysis, as it's what I've known how to do the best in my own libraries. Hi I have several processes which do not have a unique worker thread, they share the same single thread. Their goal is to perform similar tasks. Rather than creating a new thread for every one of them is there a way to use a thread pool that can handle multiple simultaneous threads? I need to be able to get the number of CPU Cores being used. Is this possible with TPL? A:

If you have a System.Threading.ThreadPool (or in.NET 4.0, a System.Threading.ThreadPool.SynchronizationContext), the

GetUtcProcessorInformation call will tell you how many cores the thread pool has available. //System.Threading.ThreadPool ThreadPool.GetUtcProcessorInformation()

Or you can just get the Thread.CurrentThread.IsThreadPoolThread. Department of Transportation's Capital Improvements Division selected a preferred alternative for the Rockwood Macon-Bibb Hwy. 12 East Urban Area. "A new pavement surface design, more appropriate traffic control and a new intersection design, are a few of the improvements selected," said Morgan County Engineer Jeremy Bunn, of the Macon County Highway Engineer's Office. All of the improvements discussed in the Findings Report that accompanies this Public Participation Plan will be funded by the State and carried out by the Highway Engineering Section (HES) of the S.C. Department of Transportation, said Bunn. "We would like to thank the community of Macon County for taking the time to submit a finding report," he said. "We are sincerely grateful for their help in making these improvements a reality." Rockwood Macon-Bibb Hwy. 12 East is located northwest of Macon, and is a two- 3e33713323
