VEGF-A induces matrix metalloproteinase-9 in cutaneous Langerhans cell histiocytosis. Langerhans cell histiocytosis (LCH) is characterized by tissue infiltration of Langerhans cells (LCs). During the development of LCH, increasing expression of vascular endothelial growth factor-A (VEGF-A) was shown in the patient lesions as well as in cell lines. Thus, we hypothesize that VEGF-A may be responsible for neoangiogenesis of LCs in LCH. To investigate this hypothesis, we examined whether VEGF-A induces matrix metalloproteinase-9 (MMP-9) and tissue inhibitor of metalloproteinase-1 (TIMP-1) in LCs. We studied LCH lesions with VEGF-A expression by laser capture microdissection. We cultured LCs from normal human skin and THP-1 cells with VEGF-A. LCH lesions express VEGF-A in LCs. The pattern of VEGF-A expression is heterogeneous and mainly expressed by angiogenic LCs. VEGF-A induced MMP-9 and TIMP-1 mRNA expression in human LCs from normal human skin as well as THP-1 cells. Thus, VEGF-A may be involved in neoangiogenesis of LCs and maturation of LCs during LCH.
