But now you need to make sure your game is being sold and that it's converting those sales into real money. A game's success or failure is based on three important factors: your game's sales, your game's conversion, and your game's retention. Now that you've got those three most important things set up, it's time to put the good stuff into motion. Why sales matter Successfully selling games takes hard work. It's about having a community of people who will buy your game and spread the word to them about your game. The reason this is important is that now that your game is on Steam and your first game is selling you need to increase the number of people who are buying it. The goal of your game's community
