What's new:

(Gilgamesh) The Basilisk or The Epic of Gilgamesh is an Old Babylonian creation epic from a picular tablet that is part of a series on the early history of mankind. The original name for this text was Izbu-Buzu (Egyptian) or Izbu (Babylonian) but it was rendered as The Lamentation of the Goddess in Western scholarship. The Sumerians and Akkadians had knowledge of the story, but did not actually compose it; the name Gilgamesh (thought to be a shortened form of the original title) first came into use in the 19th century. It is now regarded as among the best-known "epics" of ancient Mesopotamia. The tablets giving the story were found in the British Museum in the 1880s; although the text refers to a tale heard from the goddess Inanna, all of the mythological texts in the epic are written in Sumerian. Inanna, the Sumerian fertility goddess, became associated with the moon, was regarded as Inanna of Kullassu and Asipaḥla and is, in a sense, the feminine counterpart of Utu. The original take on the story stressed the goddess as a sexual being. However, the Sumerian version of the mythology, as told by Early Sumerian poets, places Inanna's birth as the result of Nephilim. Gilgamesh and Enkidu The story tells how Gugalanna, the Goddess of the Sea, tried to seduce the High Priest Ea, who had fallen under her spell. The Overlord of the gods gave Gilgamesh a gigantic club as a fight implement. Gilgamesh and Enkidu, a mortal man-and-goat hybrid, eventually overcomes Inanna and her sister Ki for the god Enlil, and she, exhausted, is forced to admit her guilt and become the consort of Utu. The story also tells how the body of the villain, who had resisted castration at Inanna's hands, was taken back to the Goddess of Anatolia. When she protested, Ea allegedly stabbed her with the snake's tongue, and the slayer of animals, the wild beast of Humbaba, appears in the form of a serpent. This version of the Gilgamesh myth has been studied in depth. South Arabian mythological parallels have been noted by cultural historians. Similarities in
