Postal Service workers, including National Association of Letter Carriers and American Postal Workers, Union Local 1085, protest a proposed Postal Service contract, in New York. (Photo: Jim Young / Reuters) Over 400 postal workers walked off their jobs at the Capitol Thursday, stopping mail service for hundreds of thousands of constituents, mostly in New York, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia. The National Association of Letter Carriers (NALC), the largest union in the U.S. Postal Service, and the American Postal Workers Union (APWU), a smaller union within the Postal Service, are fighting to prevent the so-called “Vacation Pay Elimination” policy from going into effect, which would cut annual leave for workers, while expanding the number of workers working on holidays. “Our city is under siege by radical and greedy politicians,” said D.C. letter carrier Charles Aiken, who said he had arrived to work at the Capitol around 10 a.m. with several co-workers from his local in Washington, D.C. “We are asking these politicians to support us in standing up for fairness in the workplace.” “Strikes are an honorable and legal way to bring attention to their issues,” he added. “The Postal Service is the United States’ first responder to natural disasters and acts as a lifeline to people in need. We are proud to be among our brothers and sisters who have stood with us in solidarity in the past, and we ask them to stand with us now.” Organizers estimate that more than 4,000 postal workers walked off their jobs Thursday, with workers at sites across 09e8f5149f
