Smart Objects are also an important feature in Photoshop. Smart Objects enable you to apply changes to any part of the image (a frame from a photo or an embedded URL) without interfering with other parts of the image. For example, a Smart Object can tell an image that a backside is pasted and then change the pasted portion of the image to a different color. You can use Smart Objects for manipulation to a limitless extent.

Q: How to edit an image and the path in a one line in Rust? I want to be able to edit an image and the path in a string in Rust, since my program is intended for concatenation. For example: `fn list() -> String { let buffer = String::new(); let mut image_path = ""; image_path.push(1); if let Some(image) = File::open("C:\\Users\\admin\\Pictures\\test.jpg") { let mut image_buffer = String::new(); image.read_to_string(&mut image_buffer).expect("Could not read file."); buffer = image_buffer; image_path.push(2); } if let Some(image) = File::open("C:\\Users\\admin\\Pictures\\test2.jpg") { let mut image_buffer = String::new(); image.read_to_string(&mut image_buffer).expect("Could not read file."); buffer = image_buffer; image_path.push(3); } if let Some(image) = File::open("C:\\Users\\admin\\Pictures\\test3.jpg") { let mut image_buffer = String::new(); image.read_to_string(&mut image_buffer).expect("Could not read file."); buffer = image_buffer; image_path.push(4); } buffer } print!("{}", list());` Ideally I'd want something like `image.read_to_rust(&image_path, &mut image_buffer)` instead of the `println` above, but I don't see how I can use the `read_to_rust()` function to open the path.
