We value every email.Bernie, Bernie, Bernie – and Bernie Sanders Has Had The Best Week! So let's give Bernie Sanders his own little Shabbat Shalom moment and allow this picture of this week for his campaign to sink in. Bernie Sanders delivered some masterful economic policy speeches, he visited Michigan, home to the "Black Tuesday" riots in the 1930s, he gave his signature salutes to the "New Colossus"–the Statue of Liberty–and he made a joke about how, one day, the Statue of Liberty "will be in the back of the bus." He made the Statue of Liberty joke on the 100th anniversary of John Singer Sargent's official photograph of the monument. Bernie Sanders: "In the year 2019 I say to you tonight that we have now reached the fifth anniversary of the worst financial disaster in American history. Over five years later, not only have Wall Street banks been bailed out with trillions of dollars, not only has the top 1% of Americans reaped hundreds of billions of dollars of the growth of the economy, while the bottom 99% have seen wages go down and incomes go down dramatically, but what is perhaps the most egregious example, those of us who are the children and grandchildren of immigrants—I'm a fifth-generation American myself—have seen the great-grandchildren of the immigrants become the poorest generation of Americans in history." But Bernie, if you recall, you were also the one who, early in the campaign, found himself getting lumped in with The Donald when you found yourself in a debate against Donald Trump and a lot of your supporters were spouting off their hatred for The Donald. When Donald Trump dared to take shots at Bernie Sanders, often making it sound like Bernie was a Republican by calling him "crazy Bernie." And there you were. You found yourself in a very odd situation. Candidates enjoy the opportunities to hit back, but even so, you wouldn't normally respond to critics of your candidacy the way you did. You gave answers like, "I don't
