The aim of this work is to define a new dose calculation model able to be implemented in a dosimetry system. The model is based on the fluence rate in air, instead of the dose in air, as in the previous model. The goal was to compare the results of this new model and of the previously published one, using an EBT2 (EBT2-GAFTANO-LST) film in a commercial dosimetry system. The tests were performed using an HDR source delivering 1 Gy to a body phantom filled with liquid water, acquiring 25 images of the film as the point-dose was varied. The results with the two models were compared for doses in the water phantom in a range of 0.1-1 Gy. For all doses the new model gave results within 0.13% in terms of the dose in water. The original model

Finally after all this time in development, my next game 'Ganadara' was released! For a quick look at what I've been up to in the last year; here's an overview of the game development timeline: April – Early 0.5 prototypes September – First release Over the last five years, I've spent roughly 5-6 months developing a single character animation for him, and this is the first time I've ever reached the point of having him playing within the game engine. So while a few people have been playing this version of the game, it's primarily still a work in progress. That said, I'm still trying to iron out the bugs within this version. The key game problems I've been trying to solve, include: Combat – The combat AI can be a bit imprecise. It's a work in progress. I've improved it a fair bit already, but it can still be quite a bit fiddly
