The present invention relates generally to seating assemblies, and in particular to an office seating assembly with an integrated adjustable leg mechanism. Portable seating assemblies, such as office and home seating assemblies, have advanced in complexity as ergonomic technology advances, to meet the increased interest in comfort, aesthetics, and functionality. Some seating assemblies have relatively complicated constructions, and may include integrated stowing mechanisms for storage, assembly, and/or disassembly. FIGS. 1A, 1B, and 1C illustrate an example of a known seating assembly 10. In particular, seating assembly 10 can include a first seat frame 12, a second seat frame 14 pivotally coupled to first seat frame 12, a third seat frame 16 coupled to second seat frame 14, a forth seat frame 18 pivotally coupled to third seat frame 16, and a fifth seat frame 20 coupled to fourth seat frame 18. A leg support member 22 can be coupled to forth seat frame 18, and fifth seat frame 20 can be pivotally coupled to leg support member 22. Seat assembly 10 may include a tilt assembly 25 pivotally coupled to first seat frame 12 and to second seat frame 14, and a leg tilt assembly 27 coupled to leg support member 22 and pivotally coupled to third seat frame 16, forth seat frame 18, and fifth seat frame 20

When did the first Polish-Swiss War occur? When did the first major wave of migration occur? A: Polish-Swiss War of 1756-7 Wikipedia article The conflict started in April 1756 after the Prussian army invaded Silesia and Poznan with the aim of restoring Polish crown lands annexed by Prussia in the First Partition of Poland. The First Silesian War had ended in April 1754, but a group of Silesian Ziemian (German-speaking) peasants from the Trauchburg area, who had revolted against the Prussian occupation, were not yet pacified when the Prussian army invaded Silesia in May 1756. They declared themselves to be a Polish Ziemian nation (Poloniec Ziemski) and the Swabian Confederation of Silesia issued a declaration of independence. The second one occurred in 1775. Polish-Prussian War, 1760 The third major Polish-Prussian War began after Austria had made peace with Prussia, in the course of which Prussia conquered most of Silesia and annexed it. The war was marked by several military engagements: the Battle of Pfäffikon, the Battle of Klingenthal, Battle of Hohenfriedberg and the Battle of Nördlingen. The Battle of Pfäffikon was a tactical defeat of the main Prussian army by the Poles led by John III Sobieski, Duke of Żagań. The Battle of Klingenthal was a small combat between Poles and Prussians (about one thousand men, 60 of them killed). It took place near Klingenthal on May 12, 1760. The Battle of Hohenfriedberg was a major battle between the Austrian and the Prussian armies. The battle took place on 7 May 1760 near Hohenfriedberg, in what is now southern Germany. The Austrian army was led by Charles, Prince of Anhalt-Zerbst and was attempting to suppress a Prussian uprising in Silesia. The battle resulted in an Austrian victory. The Battle of Nördlingen
