Navigation System JAPAN A26 [Voice]

our first step is to launch an application for pedestrians, such as the iphone. we also plan to support other mobile platforms in the near future. in addition, we are designing a navigation system for vehicles, such as taxis and cars. our goal is to provide assistance and navigation throughout the life cycle of our customers. thus, we aim to develop a system that can be used for commercial and residential purposes, starting with hotels, where users can navigate from room to room, and progressing to cars, elevators, and escalators. for convenience, the system can be used even in places where there is no cell phone service, such as on commuter trains. the iphone application has a map interface, allowing the user to visually confirm his or her position and navigate. it can also be used to get directions. the user can choose among voice-based and braille-based interfaces. the voice-based guide can be used only in public places, but the braille-based guide can be used anywhere. the navigation system consists of a navigation server and a mobile device, such as an iphone or an android phone. the navigation server uses gps to measure the users location and the mobile device communicates with the server via bluetooth. the navigation server sends the position of the user and the route to the mobile device. the mobile device displays the user's current position and the route to the destination. when the user taps on a destination that is represented by a braille sign, the system begins to provide detailed navigation instructions in braille. in this mode, the system can display the route to the destination, walk the user to the destination and can explain the route. the braille-mode is only available in public places. in some places, the system can be used in the absence of a cell phone signal. 5ec8ef588b
