Defense Grid: Resurgence (DGR) is the first premium expansion for the popular Defense Grid: The Awakening. Designed by the original creators of Defense Grid: The Awakening, DGR presents two brand new highly polished and balanced maps from an original perspective. Each week in June over four consecutive weeks a new pair of maps will be released providing new environments and strategic experiences and requiring new ways of thinking to beat back the aliens and protect your cores. Each map pack contains 2 maps each with a campaign mode and 4 additional modes associated with the design of that level. Multiplayer Two players can play. Each map uses the Standard Game Play formula of a central reactor surrounded by four layers of enemies. One player is the Controller and the other the Defender. The Controller begins with a base consisting of a reactor, 2 turrets and 2 support units. The Defender can build four layers of defenses starting with one defense layer and building up to 4 layers of defenses around the reactor. Each layer of defense includes one defense unit that provides protection against its associated enemy layer, one repair unit that repairs all damage caused to the associated defense layer, and one energy recovery unit that recovers all energy lost due to enemy damage. Incoherent and Gross. Unbalanced and Wasted. Boon of the Wasteland. DGR Defense Grid: Resurgence - Kill Zone Mining, Off Road Racin' When an intergalactic invader dropped in an envelope, Defense Grid: Resurgence creators Black Box teased that "something so crazy you've never seen it before" was coming. They continued, "Stay tuned and you'll see it this summer as Defense Grid: Resurgence, the first premium expansion for Defense Grid: The Awakening, releases for PC June 14!" Fast forward nine months, the June 14 release of Defense Grid: Resurgence has arrived. In this first Map Pack from DGR, we are given two new environments sure to challenge your tactics. In Kill Zone, will you construct your defenses near the spiral road in, the spiral road out, or the open platform in the middle? Perhaps all three! But you'll need to be on your toes to deter the invaders. Overflow has numerous connected platforms that will provide countless options to turn back the enemies. Will you be able to keep the cores safe? About Kill Zone c9d1549cdd

I'm trying to decide if I should use a static site generator such as Jekyll or Pelican. What I'm thinking of is that I would use one to build a static site - perhaps a blog - that I can host somewhere. These sites would only be updated via the site's admin panel, and there is no dynamic content. Are there any benefits to this over just uploading a standard RoR site to a webspace? I'm asking because I've looked at Pelican a little bit, and it looks kind of complex to set up. A: In my experience, Pelican is "do it yourself" and you have to use your own stylesheets. I think there is some benefit to letting a generator set that up for you, and just letting you edit your style sheets when you want to. It depends a lot on how much you want to customize. A lot of what you'll do if you use a static site generator will be the same as if you went through a web host, so there's little point. You might also find yourself wanting something like GitHub Pages if you have a lot of users, and have a site that doesn't change often (and will only change through admin interface editing.) Here's some things that aren't the same either way: Pelican is very framework based (uses Rack) and while you can use it with Sinatra, I think you'd find that hard to do without getting into very different way of doing things. You can put static files (images, css, js) anywhere you want, because they are static. There's very likely to be some sub-directory structure that Pelican uses because, again, it's using rack and not Sinatra. If you use Sinatra, you i." "Thank you so much!" Yaotl called, as the interpreter continued. "I suppose he really doesn't mean 'hanging out'." He replied, his face frozen in a look of wide eyed shock. "He just means his notoriety is recognized." "Apparently so," Deneaux murmured. "I'm Yurk, Alice," the translator said. "It is an honor to meet you on this earth in this time." "I'm alright, thanks," she responded. "This is Coot, Jack, David, and Rose, the rest of the group you've heard of." "I've heard of you and your ilk," he said flatly. "But not everybody in this room is an evil. Yurk, as you well know, is a moral man. So I hope I don't offend him with my ill intent in our meeting." "Um... well... sure," she decided that now was probably a good time to be confrontational. "And you need to know something as well. I wasn't the leader on my floating rock of eternal damnation. So you're really going to have to let me talk first." "As you will," he said, conceding the point. "I'm Dolores, but after I figured out you weren't the First of Man, I started calling myself 'Deneaux.'" "Another woman's work is never done," he replied. "How do you expect me to be your fan club or whatever." "Oh, we understand," she said. "You are the leader now. I'm only a follower." "As you well know," he stated. "So if you had things to say, why didn't you say them before I gave up my title?" "I'm just wondering how you ever got to be a preacher, you arrogant shit?" David asked, tossing a rock his way, which caused him to catch it on a throw-back. "Should we try to keep it civil?" Deneaux asked. "Oh, I'll try," he said, throwing out a fistful of painkillers. "Very well." "Yurk," she addressed him directly. "If you think that the world is going to hell because you're not this next pope, you have another thing coming.
