The "rock-top" is the top of the triangular set that lies at the junction of the three equilateral prisms. The triangular set grows outward at a fixed angle towards the hole, and at some point is pointing along the same line as the sticks in the top layer (or if the pyramid is on a slope in a direction perpendicular to the surface of the paper, at some point the triangle is tangent to a stick). For the pyramid, the triangle is pointing along the side of the triangular prism. In that case, the intersection of the intersection of the base of the prism with the base of the triangle is the "rock-top" of the pyramid. A: The moves I'm going to propose aren't actually what's in the photo, but they do get to the same place. First, I'm going to rotate the space pyramid so that it's sitting upright. (This cuts off the bottom and moves the triangle to the center, but I can easily rotate it back.) Then I'm going to rotate the half-triangle to be roughly vertical, with the smaller side vertical (it's not). The idea is, now we can slide a piece of paper underneath the triangle so it's spanning the small angle from the three sticks. If you draw the three sticks, you'll find the intersection of the triangle with the paper is the top of the triangle. Finally, we can fold the triangle in
